Oh that's not good

washingtonpost.com/technology/202...

Recent departures have left multiple critical systems down to two, one or even zero engineers, according to a former employee who was familiar with the situation and spoke on the condition of anonymity out of fear of retaliation.

"I know of six critical systems (like 'serving tweets' levels of critical) which no longer have any engineers," the former employee said. "There is no longer even a skeleton crew manning the system. It will continue to coast until it runs into something, and then it will stop."

What happens to all the tweets embedded in news articles if Twitter goes offline?

cc: @internetarchive any possible solution for that? 🤔

There are too many people I'm like... we're not close enough to dm or know where to find each other off platform but I'd feel the emptiness of not getting to passively follow their lives when Twitter dies. That's gonna suck.

if/when twitter goes down, I don't know if I'll survive it. I've been homebound and quarantined for almost 3 years and twitter has been my lifeline for social interaction. losing that, I'll just be alone in a room endlessly.

When Twitter debuted, it offered an alternative and challenge to MSM. But that media world is dead -- local news gutted, websites paywalled, cable news siloed into paid streaming outlets. Twitter is where people go to work around a media designed to keep people uninformed.

I don't think Twitter will last through the weekend. Twitter is restricting employee access to all its buildings through the weekend with no reason given. The entire android team resigned. The world cup, the largest sporting event in the world, starts this weekend.

Listen. You're not to panic, you hear me? When twitter is down, you move to tumblr. You're gonna get a new name, new identity, new friends, and a new family. For the people going to tiktok, you all get a burner phone just in case. Everything'll be settled. Do I make myself clear?

When Twitter shuts down, I want you all to remember me for one thing.

Not my love for gold jerseys, or my basketball takes or even all that raising money for charity.

I want you to remember that I hated the fucking Lakers with everything I've got, till my very last tweet.

NEW: Twitter just alerted employees that effective immediately, all office buildings are temporarily closed and badge access is suspended. No details given as to why.
