This tweet is so rich for me. The world-building is remarkable. There's a beautiful intersection of the known and the unknown. The timeless familiarity of Grover. The surprising sexiness of Elliott Gould. The dynamic of an imagined relationship with such fundamental communication problems.

After you've comprehended the funny imaginary relationship in the text, there's time to mull the reality. The fact is, someone DID take this photo. And they DID make it real fucking sexy. What was going on there?

And underlying this is the realisation of our own mortality. The deeper truth that we were all young and beautiful once, and ultimately we will all become the old guy in the Ocean's Eleven franchise.
