What I'm hearing from Twitter employees; It looks like roughly 75% of the remaining 3,700ish Twitter employees have not opted to stay after the "hardcore" email.

Even though the deadline has passed, everyone still has access to their systems.

As we're all very aware, folks on visas are stuck, so that's who makes up most of the roughly 25% (or less than 1,000....) expected to stay. The actual impact is not yet known — there have been no internal comms about what comes next. We're nearly 2 hours post deadline.

Lets put this into perspective — at the beginning of this month, Twitter had 7,400 employees. Barely half way through the month, if 75% do actually stick to their decision today, the company will have shrunk by a whopping ~88%.

Something I can now add: 10% of the 3,700ish remaining employees deemed critical were called to a meeting an hour before the 5PM deadline today. The invite was sent around midnight but got cancelled by noon.

The final attrition results are yet to be seen. Elon COULD convince some top talent to stay. I think it's going to be difficult — Twitter's best people can clearly find better opportunities elsewhere that are far, far less messy.

Some workers found time to crack morbid jokes. In Twitter's New York office, a giant television in a common space showed a Twitter thread from this week in which a Twitter engineer corrected a statement that Mr. Musk had made about the company. Mr. Musk then fired the engineer.

On Slack, other employees began announcing their resignations. Their farewell notes were greeted with an avalanche of salute emojis.

"I've met so many friends here," one employee wrote in a message seen by The Times. "And will always remember the good times at twtr."

NEW: Twitter just alerted employees that effective immediately, all office buildings are temporarily closed and badge access is suspended. No details given as to why.

What I'm hearing from Twitter employees; It looks like roughly 75% of the remaining 3,700ish Twitter employees have not opted to stay after the "hardcore" email.

Even though the deadline has passed, everyone still has access to their systems.

So the new boss said that starting now, everybody is going to get wrecked at work, and if you don't like it, you need to leave, and if you leave you'll get 3 months pay -- and the majority of the employees left?
So shocking.
