I am going to miss this place. We built something special here, and I do not expect to see its like ever again. I have worked here at Twitter for over 11 years. Back in July, I was the 27th most tenured employee at the company. Now I'm the 15th. I am not going to click the "yes" button in the email and I intend to accept the offer for severance.

Twitter has been such a special place over the past decade, a rare anomaly shining bright, alone in the vast space of corporate cultures. So many kind, passionate, multifaceted and interesting people have come and gone over the years. It has been an absolute pleasure and an honor to have worked with and learned from you all, past and present. Despite the continual ebb and flow, one constant has remained steadfast throughout: a culture seated firmly on a foundation of kindness, empathy, and respect. We have worked so hard at building and maintaining a culture that values kindness for each other, and a fierce, protective loyalty to the wellbeing and safety of our users, and I am filled with pride when I think back on how surprisingly successful we have been at maintaining that culture for so long. We refused to hire jerks, we explicitly graded management candidates on their empathy and how they would care for and support their teams, we rewarded good mentorship, and we demanded accountability from our leadership when they lost their way. This culture made Twitter a wonderful place to work, but it also enabled us to build some of the most reliable and cutting edge technology in the world. I will always be proud of that.

Seeing the solidarity and unwavering support that we have for each other here has warmed my heart, and validates my faith in this large community of exceptional people. You are good people. I will miss you. It's been an honor. 🙏

They sold it for waaaaay more than it's worth. Legally, they are supposed to take offers like that for shareholder value.

That's capitalism. Good things be damned.

It's outrageous that a CEO would expect his staff to work extra hard while trying to enact his vision. If Twitter stumbles tonight is the fault of employees who quit because they are angry they won't be spoiled anymore. Payroll well saved in the long haul.

The PR department was reduced to 2 employees two weeks ago, quite publicly, and that account often took a week or more between tweets, so this is not surprising.
